Creates a “tube” sound that warms up the input signal. The more “warm” the sound, the higher the gain level, saturation, compressor ratio and the level of the limiter. Controlled by an LFO. Limiter allows a soft clipping of the output signal at the selected level, once applied. We have limited the circuit and the gain level (Gain) to give to the user a more flexible sound out of the classic valve audio equipment. Easy to use, the user interface is well provided with various visual and audio indications. Input gain control, Gain (0 to 12 dB) Saturation control, Saturation (0% to 100%) Limiter control (0% to 100%) Output level control, Output level (0% to 100%) Min & Max parameters, Min & Max VU meter (0% to 100%)Q: Rails Asset Pipeline Source Filter Used in Place of Controller I have a controller that requires to render different layouts based on a paramater. Normally, I would use ApplicationController.layout for such a thing. However, I'm using the asset pipeline in my app and was unable to get that to work. So, here's the code I have. class UsersController Or this: For example, I get the following syntax error: ActionView::MissingTemplate: Could not find file 'assets/application' A: While the answer by John is certainly the most correct thing to do, I still have a simple way to accomplish this. Place this at the top of your application.html.erb file: The alternative is to specify the namespace for your class and the action to render: # In your application.html.erb file 09e8f5149f

ATube

• Supports all mixing programs • Feedback available • Protects the signal by a soft limit (no hard clipping) • Volume control • Fading • Monitoring with a 'high resolution' like the analog valve equipment
