Barrett's esophagus is considered a pre-malignant disease for esophageal adenocarcinoma. Esophageal adenocarcinoma is being encountered in an increasing number of elderly men. It is likely that this trend will continue, as the average age of patients with adenocarcinoma continues to decrease. This article reviews the literature on long segment Barrett's esophagus (LSBE) and early experience with treatment of this disease at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. A retrospective chart review of 13 patients diagnosed with LSBE who underwent endoscopy and biopsies was undertaken. We identified 13 patients who had LSBE diagnosed endoscopically, with the average age of 41.6 years. Four patients had undergone esophagectomy because of adenocarcinoma. The remaining patients were diagnosed by biopsy alone and underwent endoscopic ablation of the remaining Barrett's epithelium with Nd:YAG laser (1.0 J/cm² per point). There was no patient found to have cancer on endoscopy with follow-up of at least 24 months. Endoscopic treatment of LSBE is an effective means of addressing the risk of developing Barrett's esophagus associated adenocarcinoma and is an alternative treatment that does not require esophagectomy or esophageal diverticulectomy. The optimal treatment for LSBE remains controversial, although endoscopic techniques appear to be more effective than surgical methods.Q: CSS problem with float I can
