Falling in love with your characters: A virtual Elden League Event

Choi Ho-seon, posting on a K-pop fan blog, as if to break out of the disappointing banter that exists in many fan communities today,

(Virtual: Niuvilu in Korean) (Facebook page)

what really grinds my gears are the people who play our fantasy RPG and fall in love with their characters.

Which of course looks for your support. The main purpose of the blog is to showcase some of the main features of the LM2 and to provide a showcase of the achievements made by players who have already completed the first edition. The first post will include a listing of all the achievements and will detail the difficulty of the achievements. The second post will feature a playthrough of the "First King" part of the Adventure and will show how it can be played, and for how much of the adventure.4 million in corporate debt and another $46 million in personal debt, according to the PDI, a figure about $20 million higher than last year, mostly on credit cards. In the first three months of the year, families here banked an average of $286 a month, the PDI said. That's nearly double the $147 a month families banked last year. "People are doing what they have to do to stay afloat," said Raymond Khan, head of the PDI's public policy unit. "When you have six percent inflation and people are losing their jobs, you have to tighten your belts." In the coming year, the PDI is expecting that inflation will be 6.8 percent -- a historically high figure that's higher than the U.S. Federal Reserve forecast for inflation in 2014. As prices rise, what's happening? Most families here have limited options. The $46 million in debt for Baez and Castillo includes $11,000 in student loans for their daughters, who are enrolled in the University of Texas at Arlington. When asked about her worries about the increasing costs of living, Katherine Baez, who is an office manager for a financial services company, said she could offer only one explanation: "It must be me." "I'm buying more and more to help my family keep afloat," she said. "I'm pretty much the one paying all the
